Diner History

South Street Diner (formerly the Blue Diner) was built in 1943 by the Worcester Dining Company to serve local factory workers. Located in Boston's Leather District, the 24-hour Diner is currently owned and operated by local restaurateur, Sol Sidell.

South Street Diner has become a local landmark, a constant in Boston's after-hours scene and a final evening destination for local residents, students and visitors. When the clubs close, the Diner is the place to grab something to eat, hang out with friends, celebrity watch, and keep the party going.

No visit to Boston is complete without a stop to the South Street Diner.

Over the years, the Diner has been called "The PLACE for college students to start their Spring Break Tour" by Rolling Stone Magazine. It was named Best of Boston by Boston Magazine, as well as named for The Best Late Night Food in the U.S.A. by Esquire.

Thrillist Media Group named South Street Diner one of the best 24-Hour Diners in the country. Most recently, the Diner's famous Boston Cream Pancakes were featured on the Food Network's "Top 5 Restaurants - Best Late Night Eats."

The Diner has also been featured in numerous feature films, including: 'Hiding Out' with John Cryer; 'Second Sight' with John Laroquette; 'House Guest' with Steve Martin; 'The Equalizer' with Denzel Washington; '21;' The Blue Diner for PBS and recently featured in the DC Comic 'BatGirl'.
